

Observations: Subject complained of acute pain behind the eye, with attending nurses observing elevated temperature. Sweating and increase appeared within the subject's cranium, with treatment ineffective. Temperature continued to increase at a logarithmic rate, with the subject losing consciousness at approximately 1500 degrees Celsius. Thereafter, staff were unable to approach due to intense heat. Spontaneous globe luxation was observed, with severing of the optic nerve.